We Bought a Zoo

Reviewed by Bob Hoose
Check out full review at www.pluggedin.com

This is a film about a family in mourning that must somehow find a way to love again. Dad and his kids have to heal and rebuild lives for themselves. And they do it by, of all things, saving a zoo. It's not all tears and angst and recovery therapy, of course. A bit of comedy comes along to rescue the mood. A dash of romance rebuilds faith in the beauty of relationship. Earnest sentimentality and even a touch of whimsy lend a boost of buoyancy. What doesn't is the foul language and alcohol. The acting is impressive, the story good and the end result tender. But the PG rating and the feel-good family dramedy marketing makes this seem like a movie for kids looking for talking zebras and a blast of goofy holly jolly. Believe that and I've got a bridge you can buy right after you've signed the papers on the zoo.
